

Donna Hurt

Donna Hurt received her Master of Social Work degree from the University of Missouri. She began her career as the first-ever K–12 social worker for the Albany School District in Missouri. There she laid the foundation for future school social service positions. After spending a summer as the assistant director for the Graceland University TRIO Upward Bound Summer Program, Hurt took a position with TRIO Student Support Services, counseling and advising under-resourced, first-generation college students.

Hurt has been an advocate and a voice for under-resourced college students on her campus. She has had numerous opportunities to educate staff, faculty, and student leaders about the needs of under-resourced students and the strategies necessary to retain and graduate them. She regularly consults with departments and divisions across campus to create a better experience for students. Hurt also works directly with Graceland’s under-resourced student population to build resources and assist them in creating a life of stability and choice. The TRIO team works intentionally to help students see their future stories and assists them with the resources to one day live those stories.
